Keruing is the name given to the timber yielded from more than 70 species of the genus Dipterocarpus. This group of large hardwoods is indigenous to South East Asia, where the species are harvested from managed forests with regeneration programs.Across the entire species, a wide variety of heartwood hues are available, including deep-pink, orange-pink and purple-red. The most common heartwood is red-brown. Sapwood is usually lighter, sometimes with yellow or grey tinges. The wood darkens with age and features a generally straight or shallowly interlocked grain

Keruing timber is low maintenance, hardwearing and ideal for outdoor furniture use. The wood is strong and classified as durable, making it useful for construction purposes

Where other timbers may require curing, Keruing is completely cured and ready for immediate use with no risk of leaching, bleeding or leach sap. It contains oleo-resins and will exude it onto surfaces during drying or when exposed to heat or sunshine when in use; gums may also cause problems in machining.

What to Consider for Outdoor Timber

Outdoor settings expose timber to sun, moisture and temperature changes. For hospitality use, the best results come from choosing an appropriate finish, allowing for seasonal movement, and selecting a base with the right footprint for the top size.

If your venue is coastal or exposed to salt air, ask us about suitable base finishes and practical maintenance routines.

Best for: patios, terraces, courtyards, beer gardens

Pairing: match base footprint to top size to reduce wobble

Care: wipe spills, avoid harsh chemicals, maintain finish as needed

Coastal use: ask about suitable base finishes and protection

OUTDOOR TIMBER TABLE TOP FAQS

Ask a question

Are outdoor timber table tops suitable for hospitality?

Yes. Outdoor timber tops are used across hospitality venues including cafés, pubs, clubs and restaurants.
For best performance, match the top size to a stable base and follow basic outdoor care and maintenance.

How do I choose the right base for an outdoor timber top?

Choose a base with a footprint and weight that suits the top size. Larger tops usually need a wider stance or heavier base to reduce movement and improve stability in high-traffic areas.

Can outdoor timber be used in coastal locations?

Coastal environments can increase wear due to salt air. Ask us about base finishes and practical maintenance routines for outdoor and coastal applications.

Do you provide sustainability certification details for projects?

Yes. Where required, we can support projects that specify certified timber supply and traceability using recognised forestry schemes.
